RAY OF SUNSHINE

The support for buying Irish design has been incredible since the beginning of the year, as many of us have become acutely aware of how our buying habits could help to boost small businesses effected by the pandemic. Despite the challenging time for retailers, the creativity and talent of Irish makers has persevered, with many new labels launching this year. One of our favourites is eve ray, a brand new earrings label made in Ireland. Created by Maeve Barry, owner of accessories shop blondethestore.com, eve ray has launched with a series of earrings inspired by the work of Spanish artist Joan Miró. Each piece was designed and made by Maeve using mirrored perspex material at her home in Dublin. Prices from €36 to €40 for these truly unique, statement pieces.

ONE TO WATCH

A brand new handbag line by Dublin-based designer Julie Peelo, is one to have on your radar. Launched in September with a concise collection of six styles, PEELO bags are made with luxurious Italian leather in small quantities in Portugal.

Prices from €120 to €295; peelo.ie.

SCANDI STYLE

YOU'VE BEEN FRAMED

A gorgeous collection of glasses has landed into Specsavers stores, as part of a collaboration with DKNY. The streetwear-inspired range of 14 frames has something for everyone, with more out-there and refined shapes in matte and satin finishes, all available in sun and optical lenses. We love the simple two-tone look of these monochrome frames (€189).

New to Arnotts this season is label Custommade. Hailing from Copenhagen, the brand has a keen emphasis on classic shapes and smart tailoring with touches of drama, for pieces that are perfect for special occasions. It also has a focus on sustainability with its line By Numbers, where limited edition pieces are made using luxurious materials. Arnotts continues to celebrate Irish design this Autumn/Winter too, with standout pieces from Fee G, Caroline Kilkenny and more.
